Delay pills are available over the counter without prescription. However, if you are under 16 years old, you must seek advice from your healthcare professional before taking any medicine.

Your doctor or pharmacist will recommend the right medication for you based on your specific needs. Some factors that may influence the selection of a medication include:

- Your age
- Your medical history
- Your current health
- Any allergies or sensitivities you may have
- The cost and availability of the medication

During your consultation, your healthcare provider will conduct a thorough physical examination to determine the best course of treatment for you. They will also review your medical history and family medical history to help identify any potential risks or complications.

The most common side effects of delay pills include:

- Vomiting
- Nausea
- Headache
- Changes in appetite

It is important to let your healthcare provider know if you experience any of these symptoms so that they can monitor your condition and adjust your treatment as needed.

There are several key considerations to keep in mind when choosing a delay pill:

1. Delay pills are not a form of birth control. They are for use in cases where the period is expected but has not occurred. They should not be used for emergency contraception.
2. Delay pills should be taken according to the instructions provided by your healthcare provider. Misuse can lead to serious health complications.
3. Delay pills should not be used by women who are pregnant or breastfeeding. They should also not be used by women who have certain medical conditions, such as liver disease or kidney disease.
4. Delay pills should not be used by women who have been diagnosed with certain cancers, including breast cancer.
5. Delay pills should not be used by women who have been diagnosed with certain autoimmune disorders, such as rheumatoid arthritis.

If you are unsure whether delay pills are right for you, it is important to speak with your healthcare provider. They can provide you with the information and support you need to make an informed decision about your healthcare.
